NICKNAME

OPERATIONS

The 371 Fighter Group (FG) was allocated to Oregon and redesignated the 142 FG on May 24, 1946. As the 371 FG, the unit was originally activated on July 15, 1943 in Richmond, Virginia and assigned to First Air Force. The 371st received credit for campaigns in Normandy, Central Europe, Northern France, Rhineland, and participated in the Air Offensive Europe. They received a presidential citation for exceptional heroism during 1945. The 371st was inactivated at Camp Shanks, New York in 1945 and the 123 Fighter Squadron (SE) was assigned to the newly-allocated group. It was then that the unit was first tasked with a fighter mission and assigned the F-51, which they flew until the early 1950s.

The 142 FG was comprised of 75 officers and 800 enlisted men and divided into Headquarters 142 Fighter Group, 123 Fighter Squadron, 123 Utility Flight, 123 Weather Station, Headquarters and Detachment A, 242 Air Service Group, 142 Aircraft Control and Warning Squadron and the 1810 Aviation Engineer Company.

Ordered into active service on 1 Mar 1951

Inactivated on 6 Feb 1952

Returned to ANG and activated, on 1 Dec 1952

September 1953: The 142 FIG converted to the F-86A. With this new aircraft, the unit officially became part of the Air Defense mission.

Four polio patients were flown home to Oregon aboard the 142 FG's C-47. Commercial travel was unavailable to them because of the special electrical requirements of the patients' respirators. The aircraft was modified to accommodate the patients' special equipment, and a medical team made up of Oregon Guard members accompanied the flight. The patients were picked up in California and returned to their homes in Salem, LaGrande and Astoria. Maj. Gordon Gemmel and 1 Lt. Robert White piloted the plane. MSgt. Dave MacKinnon and TSgt. Kenny Powers were the crew chiefs.

July 1972: The 142d FG underwent an Initial Capability Inspection to determine the unit's ability to perform its mission in the newly-received F-101B. The group passed with flying colors. The 142d Fighter Group was redesignated the 142d Fighter Interceptor Group that following October.
