NICKNAME

OPERATIONS

The mission of the 1st Air Support Operations Group is to provide superior aerospace expertise to I Corps and other US Army units to enable rapid, decisive, and sustainable airpower anytime, anywhere.

The group's responsibilities are divided into two main portions. One is to provide weather support to Army aviation units. The other is to form tactical air control parties which provide close air support to Army units.

Combat in Burma and China, Apr 1944-Sep 1945. Teams on duty with British, Chinese, and American ground forces, directing fighter-bomber planes on missions in air support for the ground forces they served. Participated in an assault landing on 17 May 1944 in the battle for Myitkyina, Burma.

A ceremony moving the 1st Air Support Operations Group from under 12th Air Force into the hands of 13th Air Force occurred 1 Oct 2008 at Fort Lewis, Wash. Lt. Gen. Chip Utterback, commander of 13th Air Force, assumed control of the 1st ASOG and its subordinate units at the ceremony, nearly tripling the group's assigned forces to 400 personnel in the process. "We are focused on today's war with folks from all over our command deeply engaged in today's battle," General Utterback said. "We are organizing to bring the speed and flexibility that comes with airpower to the Pacific." With the move from Air Combat Command to Pacific Air Forces, the 1st ASOG assumes three new squadrons, in addition to two previously assigned squadrons. The new squadrons include: the 3rd Air Support Operations Squadron at Fort Wainwright, Alaska; the 25th Air Support Operations Squadron at Wheeler Army Air Field, Hawaii; and the 16th Air Support Operations Squadron at Fort Richardson, Alaska. The 1st ASOG will continue to command two subordinate squadrons: the 1st Weather Squadron and the 5th Air Support Operations Squadron, both at Fort Lewis.
