OPERATIONS

The 8109 Air Base Squadron, which had been formed at Holman Field while the 133d Wing was on active duty, had been actively recruiting airmen and pilot candidates, and the unit began seeing the results. The first Air National Guard aviation cadets started returning with their wings and commissions. These new pilots posed some problems for the old World War II heads who had trouble teaching the new pilots how to use their feet when flying an aircraft with a tail wheel.
